MARYLAND GAZETTE,

Containing the freshest Advices, Foreign and Domestic.

WEDNESDAY, November 30, 1748.

From the UNIVERSAL MAGAZINE.

THEY write from Stockholm, that the prince successor appears extremely attentive to contribute all in his power to the benefit of the people he is hereafter to reign over. With this view he has formmed a corps of 24 young gentlemen, who are to be instructed in the different parts of the military art, and other sciences, besides the foreign tongues; in order that draughts of officers may hereafter be made out of them for the service of their country.

According to letters from Warsaw, the princess Mary Christiana of Saxony, daughter of his Polish majesty, is now talked of for a consort to the duke of Savoy, whom the prints a short time ago represented as upon the point of marriage with madam Victoire of France.

Some accounts from Paris mention a small pamphlet publish'd under the title of An Exhortation to the Nobility; the main design of which is to engage the principal families in the kingdom to build each of them a man of war at their own expence, as the most effectual means of perpetuating their memory to posterity.

NAPLES, August 20.

WE have received advice, that the frigate which went to fetch the king's ambassador from Constantinople, was obliged in the Archipelago to fight a Turkish corsair, which he had the good fortune to sink with all her crew. Our galleys have also taken a Barbary galliot.

Genoa, August 24. They write from Nice, that the galleys of Spain had received orders to sail to Antibes, to wait there for the infant Don Philip, and to bring him from thence to this city, from whence he will go and take possession of the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla.

Leghorn, August 24. All the Genoese merchants in this city are preparing in a hurry to return home, they being ordered to be at Genoa some time next month, under the most rigorous penalties.

Cremona, August 26. Letters from the Western Riviera mention a revolt of the peasants there against the French.

Pavia, August 27. The republic of Venice has behaved with so much wisdom, that the resentment of the empress against the people of Vicenza is entirely appeased.

Chamberry, August 28. It is given out here, that the king of Sardinia will shortly marry the duchess dowager of Guastalla, and that his majesty has resolved to keep on foot, even in time of peace, 50,000 troops.

Turin, August 26. The king, by his accession to the preliminaries, having renounced the execution of that part of the treaty of Worms which regards the republic of Genoa, his majesty has charged his minister at Aix la Chapelle to demand, that the articles of that treaty which remain in force, and which regard the cessions made by the empress queen, be confirmed, and solemnly guarantied in the definitive treaty of peace.

Chamberry, September 2. The king of Spain, in order to give the infant Don Philip fresh marks of his affection, has granted him four regiments to garrison the duchies of Parma, Placentia, and Guastalla, besides a million of piasters to defray the expence of his taking possession thereof, continuing him grand admiral of Spain, and in all his commanderies.

Aix la Chapelle, Sept. 7. Since the arrival of M. du Theil, second plenipotentiary from France, this minister and the count de St. Severin have had several conferences with the other plenipotentiaries, particularly with those of the Maritime powers; and 'tis assured that they have declared, that the king their master was disposed to accelerate as much as possible the great work of peace, in hopes that the other powers would also concur therein as much as in them lay. The court of Vienna, who at first raised some difficulties relating to the affairs of Italy, seems at present desirous to conform to every thing that has been regulated upon that subject; and we flatter ourselves, that those which Spain forms concerning the 4th and 10th articles, of the preliminaries, will also soon be removed.

Brussels, Sept. 8. Count de Courtch, governor of Bergen-op zoom, arrived here yesterday in the evening, since which there is more talk than ever of the approaching evacuation of that place, and of all Dutch Flanders; but that of the Austrian Low Countries seems yet at a great distance, the States General demanding such a new barrier as 'tis said the empress will hardly grant them.

Versailles, September 11. The count de la Salle, upon his arrival at Paris, was arrested as he quitted his post chaise, and conducted to the Bastile.

Hague, Sept. 13. The prince of Orange's return from Amsterdam has been put off, on account of some new demands of the burghers of that town. They now require, that all the eschevins, and members of the old council, should be dismissed; that none of the officers of the militia should ever posses any employment in the regency; and that a new council of war should be formed intirely independent of the magistrates. The deputies of the burghers have had several audiences of the prince stadtholder on these points, and his highness has issued a proclamation quite agreeable to their request. We hear likewise from Amsterdam, that the prince of Orange intends to erect there a board of trade, composed of the most eminent merchants of that city.

Aix la Chapelle, Sept. 8. We are told, that the difficulty between the courts of Spain and Hanover still subsists, and that the earl of Sandwich and sir Thomas Robinson refuse to sign the definitive treaty before the king of Spain has reimbursed the king of Great Britain the sums due to this monarch as elector of Hanover; or at least, that this article should be comprehended in the definitive treaty.

Sept. 9. The count de St. Severin is making extraordinary preparations for celebrating the feast of the king his master, at which all the ministers of the congress are to assist in new cloaths, liveries, and coaches, in the magnificence whereof each strives to emulate; such great respect will be paid to the feast of the conqueror. But all this does not advance the signing of the definitive treaty; eleven of the principal articles whereof are, it is said, to be new-moulded in concert with the plenipotentiaries who are here. The courts of Dresden and Bavaria will probably have some share in the alterations which are to be made in these articles; but what changes will be made in them time will shew, as well as when the evacuation of the places will be made.

Hamburgh, Sept. 10. It is certain that the Russian troops will not return into their own country this year, the empress of Russia having represented the impracticability thereof, without running the risque of ruining that body.

Paris, Sept. 13. It is given out here, that the English will not restore Cape Breton before the Low Countries are evacuated, and that France demands twenty millions of the English, by way of indemnification for the damages done at Pondicherry. The duke d'Aumont is preparing for a voyage to London, where he is to reside in quality of ambassador.

LONDON.

July 9. On saturday the 4th, the prince of Wales sent to inform sir Hans Sloane, that he and his princess desired to see his noble and curious museum on the tuesday following, if convenient to him; and that Dr. Mortimer, secretary of the Royal Society, might attend them there: On sunday the doctor was honoured with his royal highness's commands, by a special

meſſage brought to him at his own houſe, by a gentleman from the prince.——On tueſday Dr. Mortimer went to ſir Hans's, by the prince's deſire, a little before twelve, in order to be in readineſs at their royal highneſſes arrival; and receiving them at the door, had the honour to kiſs the hands of both, when they alighted out of the coach. The prince being come into the hall, told the doctor with great courteſy and affability, that he was come to put himſelf and the princeſs entirely under his guidance and direction, laying aſide all ceremony; and therefore commanded the doctor to go up the great ſtairs before him, which he did, and conducted their royal highneſſes into the room where ſir Hans was ſitting. The prince took a chair, and ſat down by the good gentleman ſome time, when he expreſſed the great eſteem and value he had perſonally for him, and how much the learned world was obliged to him for his having collected ſuch a vaſt library of curious books, and ſuch immenſe treaſures of the valuable and inſtructive productions of nature and art. Sir Hans's houſe forms a ſquare of above 100 feet each ſide, incloſing a court; and three front rooms had tables ſet along the middle, which were ſpread over with drawers, filled with all ſorts of precious ſtones in their natural beds, or ſtate, as they are found in the earth; except the firſt, which contained ſtones formed in animals, which are ſo many diſeaſes in the creatures that bear them; as the moſt beautiful pearls, which are but warts in the ſhell fiſh; the bezoar's concretions in the ſtomach; and ſtones generated in the kidneys and bladder, of which men woefully know the effects: But the earth in her boſom generates the verdant emerald, the purple amethyſt, the golden topaz, the azure ſapphire, the crimſon garnet, the ſcarlet ruby, the brillant diamond, the glowing opall, and all the painted varieties that Flora herſelf might wiſh to be deck'd with: Here the moſt magnificent veſſels of cornelian, onyx, ſardonyx, and jaſper, delighted the eye, and raiſed the mind to praiſe the great creator of all things.——When their royal highneſſes had view'd one room, and went into another, the ſcene was ſhifted; for when they returned, the ſame tables were covered for a ſecond courſe with all ſorts of jewels, poliſh'd and ſet after the modern faſhion; or with gems carv'd or engrav'd, the ſtately and inſtructive remains of antiquity: For the third courſe the tables were ſpread with gold and ſilver ores, with the moſt precious and remarkable ornaments uſed in the habits of men, from Siberia to the cape of Good Hope, and from Japan to Peru; and with both antient and modern coins and medals in gold and ſilver, the laſting monuments of hiſtorical facts; as thoſe of a Pruſias, king of Bithynia, who betray'd his allies; of an Alexander, who, mad with ambition, over ran and invaded his neighbours; of a Cæſar, who enſlaved his country to ſatisfy his own pride; of a Titus, the delight of mankind; of a pope Gregory XIII, recording on a ſilver medal his blind zeal for the cauſe of religion, in perpetuating thereon the maſſacre of the proteſtants in France; as did Charles IX, the reigning king in that country; here may be ſeen the coins of a king of England, crown'd at Paris; a medal repreſenting France and Spain, ſtriving which ſhould firſt pay their obeiſance to Britannia; others ſhewing the effect of popular rage, when overmuch oppreſs'd by their ſuperiors, as in the caſe of the De Witts in Holland; the happy deliverance of Britain, by the arrival of king William; the glorious exploits of a duke of Marlborough; and the happy arrival of the preſent illuſtrious royal family amongſt us.——The gallery, 110 feet in length, preſented a moſt ſurprizing proſpect; the moſt beautiful corals, cryſtals, and figured ſtones, the moſt brilliant butterflies, and other inſects; ſhells painted with as great variety as the precious ſtones, and feathers of birds vying with gems: Here the remains of the antediluvian world excited the awful ideas of that great cataſtrophe, evident teſtimonies of the truth of Moſes's hiſtory; the variety of animals ſhew us the beauty of all parts of the creation.——Then a noble viſta preſented itſelf thro' ſeveral rooms filled with books, among theſe many hundred volumes of dried plants; a room full of choice and valuable manuſcripts; the noble preſent ſent by the preſent French king to ſir Hans of his collections of paintings, medals, ſtatues, palaces, &c. in 25 large Atlas volumes; beſides other things too many to mention here.——Below ſtairs ſome rooms are filled with the curious and venerable antiquities of Egypt, Greece, Hetruria, Rome, Britain, and even America; others with large animals preſerved in the ſkin; the great ſalon lined on every ſide with bottles filled with ſpirits, containing various animals. The halls are adorned with the horns of diverſe creatures, as the double-horn'd rhinoceros of Africa, the foſſil deer's horns from Ireland, nine feet wide; and with weapons of different countries, among which it appears, that the Mayaleſe, and not our moſt Chriſtian neighbours the French, had the honour of inventing that butcherly weapon the bayonet. Fifty volumes in folio would ſcarce ſuffice to contain a detail of this immenſe muſeum, conſiſting of above 200,000 articles.——Their royal highneſſes were not wanting in expreſſing their ſatisfaction and pleaſure, at ſeeing a collection which ſurpaſs'd all the notions or ideas they had formed from even the moſt favourable accounts of it. The prince on this occaſion ſhew'd his great reading and moſt happy memory; for in ſuch a multiplicity, ſuch a variety of the productions of nature and art; upon any thing being ſhewn him he had not ſeen before, he was ready in recollecting where he had read of it; and upon viewing the antient and modern medals, he made ſo many judicious remarks, that he appeared to be a perfect maſter of hiſtory and chronology: He expreſs'd the great pleaſure it gave him to ſee ſo magnificent a collection in England, eſteeming it an ornament to the nation; and expreſſed his ſentiments, how much it muſt conduce to the benefit of learning, and how great an honour will redound to Britain, to eſtabliſh it for public uſe to the latеſt poſterity.

Sept. 6. They write from Paris, that the laſt courier which arrived from Aix la Chapelle deliver'd his packet into the king's own hand; and that after peruſing it alone in his cloſet, his majeſty ſent for the marquis de Puiſieux, principal ſecretary of ſtate, with whom he remained in cloſe conference upwards of three hours. The marquis ſeemed in high ſpirits when he came from the king, and dropp'd ſome expreſſions, which gave occaſion to the report, that the definitive treaty was actually ſigned by his majeſty.

Private letters by the laſt Dutch mail inform us, that the ſtates of Groeningen have reſolved, after the example of other provinces, to confer on the ſtadtholder the power of diſpoſing of all employments, political and military, as they hereafter become vacant.

Sept. 8. According to ſome advices from Aix la Chapelle, the miniſters there are making ſuch diſpoſitions for their convenience, as if they expected to ſtay there all the winter.

Extract of a Letter from Aix-la Chapelle, Auguſt 20, 1748.

"The plenipotentiaries who a few days ago encamped upon the hill, about a mile from the city, have ſtruck their tents, evacuated their camp, and returned into quarters, and this before any evacuation is made of the conqueſt of Italy or thoſe in the Low-Countries, and before the ſigning of the peace, which we have been, by the public papers, made to believe would ſoon be effected. The writers of the Dutch Gazettes being afraid of telling any more falſities, talk no longer affirmatively upon theſe points. The months of July, and indeed that of Auguſt, before the end of both which, the peace was, according to the intelligence we had from them, to be ſigned, and the places evacuated. The places to be evacuated are now out of the queſtion; but at preſent they ſay, it is thought theſe things will be brought about ſome time in the month of September. It is high time for them to begin to talk in a leſs poſitive ſtrain, in order to preſerve their reputation, and the ſale of their Gazettes. Whatever prophetic ſcience the ableſt even of the miniſters plenipotentiary may be poſſeſſed of, there is none of them can poſitively ſay when the peace will be ſigned, or whether the evacuations will be made this year or the next. It is true, as a reſpectable miniſter the other day ſaid, that in a ſhort time the clouds, which render theſe matters obſcure, will probably be diſſipated, and that we ſhall be able by the middle of next month to ſee more clearly, and know what to depend on; but this is far from being certain and abſolute. And though the plenipotentiaries every day eat, drink, dance and play together, yet the work of the general pacification, does not advance a jot more for it, nor does it prevent the levy of men, both for land and ſea, which France is diligently making, nor hinder the large convoys of ammunition and proviſion which are ſending to Bergen-op-zoom and Maeſtricht, no more than it does the Auſtrians from raiſing recruits in ſuch a manner as ſurprizes every body. Nevertheleſs, the ſigning the preliminaries was generally looked upon as a certain and infallible prelude to the ſigning of the peace itſelf."

It is ſaid that thirteen regiments of foot and marines are ſoon to be diſcharged.

ANNAPOLIS.

Lately died in Kent County Mr. George Wilſon, a Gentleman ſo well eſteemed in the County where he lived, that they made choice of him in many ſucceſſive Elections, to repreſent them in Aſſembly; he being one of the oldeſt Members in the late Houſe.

On the 6th Inſtant died in Somerſet County Capt. Matthias Gale, (Brother of the late Hon. Levin Gale, Eſq;) a Gentleman of a mild, affable and courteous Diſpoſition; a fair, honeſt neſt and candid Dealer; he was much beloved and eſteemed, and his Death is lamented by all his Acquaintance.

And on the 7th died there, to the great Loſs of that County, Col. George Doſhiel, who had many Years ſerved it as a Magiſtrate, and as a Repreſentative, with great Fidelity.

At a ſpecial Court of Oyer and Terminer, held at Upper-Marlborough on Friday laſt, for Prince George's County, one William Diſkins, alias Price, was found guilty of Horſe ſtealing, and received Sentence of Death. He was indicted for ſeveral other criminal Offences, but tried only for the one abovementioned.

At the County Court for the ſame County, a Negro Fellow was tried and condemned, for killing one of his fellow Slaves with an Axe.
